FISHER PLANS COAL GRANT
TO CITIES FOR LOCAL USESecretary of Interior's Bill to Congress Gives 640 Acres for Operation.

Secretary of the Interior Fisher has a plan to allow Government coal lands to cities which in turn may operate them under certain regulations to supply municipal needs as well as those of citizens, according to reports from Washington today. Fisher has recommended that Congress pass a bill granting 640 acres of coal land to the city of Grand Junction, Colo., and meanwhile the Interior Department has withdrawn from entry the land it desires.

The general bill he offers would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to patent 640 acres of Government coal land for each city and 640 acres for each town under conditions providing for prompt and continuous development of the coal, the safeguarding of the health and safety of labor in mining or handling the coal, the prevention of undue waste of mineral resources, and other restrictions.

The title of the land patented shall revert to the Government if any city or town shall fail to carry out the provisions of the patent.

NEW YORK CENTRAL PIER FIRE,
PERILS LIFE; DAMAGE BIGFiremen Forced to flee From Flames
by Jumping Into North River.

Caption: P. J. Tegner.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—Fire on the New York Central pier of West Third street, North river, spread so rapidly this afternoon that within 10 minutes, the two great piers, which were well filled with valuable merchandise, were engulfed in terrible flames—so fierce and sudden that the firemen were forced to jump into the river to avoid death.

Two boats and two small craft, or additional flotilla were sent in, the boats being used to the best in the opinion of the firemen, were brought together to prevent the destruction of the entire waterfront.

The wind was blowing northward, so the boats had their hands full in getting the piers of the railroad line, and to join the New York Central pier to the pier, the firemen had to go out to the pier to keep it under control. The loss was $100,000.

SATURDAY EVENING, AUG. 10, 1912

VERY VERY!

Pittsburg Gazette-Times

More in sorrow and surprise than in anger is the day of directing attention to Woodrow Wilson's project of language herself and hereby discharged.
"The very ideal," his idolators will exclaim—while is the one idea that runs through his speech of acceptance with wonderful regularity.

Governor Wilson thanks the notifiers for equipping "very" warmly for holding him the nomination.

He accepts with a very profound sense of his responsibility.

He undertakes to speak "very" plainly the truth that is in him.

One people find life "very" hard to survive.

The tonic of this new age is "very"
exalting.

The devotion is "very" serious for the Democratic party.

The Baltimore platform is a "very" practical document.

National problems lately have been sorted by "very" small groups.
Positively they went about the job
"very" honestly.

But sometimes they did it "very"
ignorantly.

And occasionally "very" shortsightedly.

Wherever the Government's "very"
honesty is to be found,

Protectionists have listed "every" anxiously that the Tariff committee should be in the hands of their friends.

This concerns us "very" deeply.

So we see "very" clearly some of the methods of price fixing.

Only a "very" small number of the people are partners in Tariff legislation.

The big interests can "very" easily detest prices.

The Trusts belong to a "very" recent

Also to an age that is "very" sophisticated.

Under the ban of the Sherman law trusts have grown up "very" luxuriantly.

Maintaining the confederation of large financial interests has come about "very" naturally.

Its "very" existence renders the Money Trust suspect.

But our lawyers are "very" notably dispossessed of a more lawabiding spirit.

Though only a very little while ago business, under their counsel, was done.

So "very" many persons beside bankers should be constituted in curing the currency.

Fortunately the people, led by the Democrats, are working toward a "very" definite effort.

The "very" fact of the Panama Canal proves that we are taking a revived interest in international trade.

And so forth and so on.

Which suggests the observation that its excellency is very pink.

KEEP THE SIDEWALKS CLEAR.
Monongahela Times

A master in which the Councils of Monongahela might concern themselves, is the keeping sidewalks clear of all obstruction. Monongahela is the victim of a custom which has grown to large proportions, and which at the present time is taking up large sections of the sidewalks for personal benefit. This is a condition that should not exist. Sidewalks are made for the accommodation of the public a large, and the people should have the full benefit of every foot of paved area dedicated to public use.

When the streets were not so congested as they are at the present time the custom which obtained then, and which has been followed ever since, was not of material hindrance to the public. The sidewalk, even with the slight characteristic of the days, was available to the people, but conditions are different today.
There are times, and particularly on Sundays, when the sidewalks in the business portion of the city are not sufficiently large to take care of the traffic, and are daily placed in the way of additional hindrance to the traffic which pour over them
for hours. There should be some additional regulation in this respect, and the proper Councils recognize this fact, and attempt to remedy existing conditions the better it will be for the public at large.

The two needs of the present day in the city are, the additional hindrance
to the traffic which pour over them
for hours. There should be some additional regulation in this respect, and
the proper Councils recognize this fact, and attempt to remedy existing conditions the better it will be for the

POCAHONTAS' DEMAND

By Isaac of Yukon.

"You ought to marry me for saving your life."

This was the suggestion that Miss Pocahontas Powhatan made to Captain John Smith after she had secured a stay of execution in the wigwam.

"I should like to marry you, Poca,
very much but times are tough and I am not certain that I can hold my job longer than this year. I might be recalled and then you would not like to see the Smith grub in England."

That was what the captain said to Pocahontas.

"Well, look here, Johnny, boy, do you think I am around this neck of the woods throwing myself between you and the man with the big stick to save you and then you try to back pedal?"

"This minute your body would be in your moccasin, your scalp would be on the tent pole and your boots would be on the feet of a brave lad I don't trust you."

"You are right, Poca, but I have no money to tackle the furniture installation plan neither is my note good on the bank of the James. True you saved my life and I am glad to help your father all I can to sell his real estate to the English soldiers," said Smith.

"Look here, Cappy, if I would have to live through that trouble, I would have the big Indian smash your head with a tomahawk," said Pocahontas.

"Say, Poca, let us arbitrate this matter. Over there is John Rolfe digging a ditch to run the water out of his cellar; he is an awful nice young man and is very honest; he told me if I ever saw a young Indian running around that no one had a stand-off with him to let him know. Now, Poca, Mr. Rolfe has got some money; he is ready to go to housekeeping; the next step that comes from over the ocean will bring his installation furniture; he is young and you can train him; he will make you a man that you can be proud of as the years grow old and as the family register becomes larger.
Leave it all to me, Poca, and I'll give the way."

"Oopps, you're joking."

"Now, a blamed bit of it. I'll have Rolfe plowed if he doesn't marry you, he'll be glad to be admitted into one of the First Families of Virginia."

"Cappy, do you know this is so soon?"

"It can't be too sudden for Rolfe."
"Say Cappy, you came most thoughtfully in now gettin' your even split. That is all noon."

"Don't mention it."

The two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jean Jacques Rousseau, on June 28 of this year, was almost unobserved in the United States, though the part played by Rousseau's educational and political theories in the history of this republic have been considerable from the very beginning.

Some attention was given to the anniversary in Europe. One enthusiast German, while admitting that Switzerland was Rousseau's birthplace and France his home, claimed that Germany had discovered him and ennobled his achievements into an eternal gift to civilization.

At the International Mathematics Congress, held in Rome in 1908, a commission was appointed for each nation to study the subject of mathematics-teaching in the several countries.

The members of the American commission, David Eugene Smith, Teachers' College, New York City; W.
E. Osgood, Harvard University; and J. W. A. Young, University of Chicago, added by a large number of eminent teachers from all over the country acting on various committees, made a very thorough investigation of American conditions, and prepared a series of reports which will be presented at the 1912 meeting of the congress to be held in Cambridge, England, in August. The reports have been published for free distribution by the United States Bureau of Education.

Electrical Experiment To Quicken Dull Children

New York School Heads Considering It—Tesla to Be in Charge.

Remarkable Results Have Been Obtained From Trial in Sweden.

A NOVEL experiment in the classes of defective children in the public schools of New York city is to be tried this fall, provided the action of the board of education is obtained. This experiment consists of electrifying a schoolroom, which process it is maintained by experts, arouses the children to greater mental and physical ability and tends to make them brighter in every respect. It is proposed to experiment with the normal pupils first, since they have more need of a brain stimulator.

Provided the school commissioners are willing to allow the tests, the work is to be in charge of Nikola Tesla, the inventor. The scientist, City Superintendent of Schools William H. Maxwell and Dr. L. B. Blum have had several conferences on the matter, and when the subject was thoroughly explained to Dr. Maxwell he expressed his willingness to have the scheme tried out. It is likely that the proposition will be put up to the board of education at an early fall meeting, perhaps the first, on Sept. 11.

City Superintendent Maxwell said that since the electrifying process is still in the experimental form his first demand was an assurance from Mr. Tesla that, let alone helping the pupils, the test would not prove detrimental.

European Experiments.

"Mr. Tesla stated that there is no possibility of the experiments having anything but a good effect on the pupils. If this electrification of schoolrooms will improve the ability of the children it should be thoroughly tried out. The inventor told me that the process has been used with great success in Europe and after a number of conferences with him I came to the conclusion that the system should be tested in the New York schools."

The European experiments with the electrifying machine have taken place in Stockholm, Sweden. The work in that city was carried on under the supervision of Professor Svante Arrhenius, the noted physicist. Mr. Tesla followed the tests across the water and then consulted with Dr. Maxwell. The scientist claims that the main apparatus used in the foreign experiments was originally devised by him. Mr. Tesla explained that it was reported another man was responsible for the invention.

The machinery used in the electrification consists of a series of wires hidden in the walls of the schoolroom. It is proposed to take two rooms as nearly alike as possible and at the end of the proper period compare the results obtained in the electrified and unelectrified rooms. About fifty pupils will make up the classes, and the tests are to be conducted without the knowledge of the children or the teachers.

Mr. Tesla has volunteered to take charge of the installation of the apparatus and conduct the tests himself. The wires, concealed in the walls of the classroom, are to be charged with high frequency currents.

Will Cost $10,000.

"I am certain," said Mr. Tesla, "that the experiment will prove that these currents will assist retardation and cause the children to greater ability. The stimulation of the nervous system helps the physical as well as the mental condition of the child. With Dr. Maxwell's cooperation very thorough tests of the process are likely to be made. The

WHY CHINA ISN'T RECOGNIZED.

Republic Must First Show Us It Is Firmly Established.

Reasons for the withholding of recognition of the Chinese republic were discussed recently by Secretary Root and Representative Sulzer. Following this conference it was made clear at the department that the Chinese republic will not be recognized by the United States government until the new government has demonstrated that it is established on a sound basis and competent to fulfill all the obligations of sovereign power.

Inasmuch as the United States has been from the first most insistent in urging a policy of concurred action by all the powers toward China since her troubles began a year ago, it was pointed out that this government naturally will act in harmony with the other nations in granting recognition to the new republic.

FINGERS SEWED ON.

Digits Unite Perfectly After Girl Lost Them Under An Ax.

Fingers that had been completely severed from her hand by the blade of an ax are growing again on the right hand of the six year old granddaughter of John Beeson of Chanute, Kan. The little girl was holding a block of wood while a playmate cut it with a hand ax.

When the surgeon arrived to dress the wound he asked where the fingers were. They had been cut clean off, and left lying in the barn where the girls were playing. A lantern was lighted, and the dismembered parts were found in the hay. The fingers were sterilized and sewed on.

Labor to keep alive in your heart that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.—George Washington.

only thing remaining is to get the sanction of the board of education."

It is estimated that the proper application of the currents will necessitate the expenditure of $10,000. This matter, however, will be settled later. It is thought quite unlikely that a lack of funds will hinder the work.

The Stockholm experiment with the electrifying process has been closely watched by scientists throughout the United States. The novelty of the plan aroused considerable interest, but through Mr. Tesla's services New York will probably be the first American city to try it. It is said that this test will follow closely along the lines of the foreign experiment.

For the work abroad two sets of fifty children, each averaging the same age and physical condition, were placed in separate classrooms exactly alike except for the concealed wires installed in the walls of one room. The regular school work was taken up, and the test lasted for six months. Frequent observations of the pupils were recorded to ascertain the effect of the high tension waves on the children under electrical treatment.

At the end of the experimental period the children in the magnetized room, the official report of the tests says, showed an increase in stature of two inches, while in the unmagnetized room the average increase was only one and one-quarter inches. The pupils in the electrified room likewise showed a weight increase and proportionate physical development greater than the children in the other. Then the investigators looked to the mental side of the question.

According to the report, this examination showed that the children exposed to the electrical waves averaged 92 per cent in their school work, fifteen being marked 100 by the teacher, while in the unmagnetized room the pupils were credited with an average of 75 per cent, and only nine obtained perfect ratings.

Benefits Noted.

The electrified children, so the report says, appeared generally to be more active during the experiment and less subject to fatigue than those in the other room. The instructors likewise benefited by the treatment, it is said, and positively attest to the fact that their faculties were quickened and their powers of endurance stimulated by the waves.

Experimental psychologists, however, recommended cautious tests with the new process. Professor W. C. Bagley, head of the department of psychology of the University of Illinois, said on the subject:

"Such tests would certainly need to be repeated under carefully controlled conditions before we reached any conclusion. Not only this, but one would necessarily have to wait some years to see whether there were any deleterious results with the children subjected to the experiments. It would be the height of folly to encourage a wholesale application of this treatment prior to a most cautious and prolonged investigation within restricted areas."

This statement from Professor Bagley was presented to Mr. Tesla. On reading it carefully the scientist said: "After experimenting on myself and my assistants steadily during the past ten years, employing my most powerful coil, very much stronger than that used in the Stockholm test, I noted absolutely no ill after effects."

WEDDING RING IN TREE TRUNK

Youths, Following Lightning's Visit, Find Gold Band Dated 1879.

While out walking through the mountains James Anderson and Arthur McIntyre of Orange came across an old apple tree on the Thompson farm, near Livingston, N. J., which had been split in half by lightning.

While examining the tree and tracing the course of the lightning the youths were surprised to see something glinting from the wood, as if it were a piece of gold imbedded.

Pocketknives were soon brought into play, and with some difficulty the young men succeeded in digging out a gold band wedding ring. The circle bore the inscription, "To Julia Henderson from John, May 17, 1879." Not even the oldest inhabitants could recall any one named Henderson having lived in that vicinity, and it is thought that some yahoo lost the ring many years ago when the tree was but a sapling and that it became imbedded in the trunk.

TWO SHELLS ON THESE EGGS.

Lagrange (Mo.) Men's Product Surprises Her Owner.

Lagrange, Mo., has a bizarre monstrosity in a White Brahmin hen, which prefers laying eggs with double shells—a fully developed egg with the regulation hard shell incased in a skin-like covering about a quarter of an inch thicker than the inside shell. After being exposed to the air for a short time this outside covering becomes crystallized and soon forms a shell nearly as hard as the one inside.

The hen is the property of Reuben L. Becker.

ROUSED THE AUDIENCE.

A Mining Camp Melodrama With an Unexpected Climax.

Joseph Jefferson used to say that his career came very near being nipped in the bud in a small western town. He at that time was a member of a small pioneer company which progressed by means of three "bull teams" from one mining camp to another. They were always heartily received by the miners and cowboys, who readily paid the $5 in gold required to witness their performance. Mr. Jefferson was the traditional melodramatic villain and in the third act was supposed to kidnap "the child." The supposed mother, hearing his cries, rushed upon the scene just as he is about to escape and fires a fruitless shot from a revolver.

Upon this particular occasion all had gone well until this scene was reached, and the audience, many of whom had never before seen any kind of theatrical performance, sat as if spellbound. At the crack of the mother's revolver, however, the spell was rudely broken. "By heaven she missed him!" a red shirted miner in the front row shouted, drawing his own six shooter and jumping to his feet. "Round to the back door and lead him off! fore he en'git 'osses b'ys!" he yelled, and, following him, half the audience stampeded for the exit.

The excitement was finally allayed by the "mother" and the villain appearing hand in hand before the curtain and the manager's explanation of the situation. When the performance had been concluded the audience insisted on paying another admission price and having an immediate repetition from beginning to end.

THE WORD HELL.

A Little Book That Contains Some Startling Information.

A little book selling at only ten cents, postpaid, is having a very wide circulation running up into the millions. It contains some very startling information respecting the meaning of the word Hell. It strives to demonstrate, both from the Hebrew and the Greek of our Bible, that Hell is NOT a place of eternal torment, but merely another name for the GRAVE, the GRAVE, the STATE OF DEATH. It affects to show that man was not redeemed from a far off place of eternal torture, but quotes the Scriptures proving that he was REDEEMED from the GRAVE at the cost of his Redeemer's LIFE and that the Scriptural Hope, both for the Church and the World, is a resurrection hope based upon the death and resurrection of Jesus. The book is certainly worth the reading. The information it furnishes is certainly valuable, far beyond its trifling cost. CABARETS IN BIRDLAND NEXT.

Lecturer in Chicago Talks of Ragtime and Opera in Feathers.

Henry Oldys, formerly of the United States biological survey, in a lecture at the University of Chicago talked of the "aesthetic sense" of birds.

"Birds dance in the air, do Highland flings and the motto-sote evolutions with the most perfect rhythm," said Oldys. "They sing a bird ragtime and at other times snatches of song which greatly resemble our grand opera."

"There is a blackbird that has a song almost parallel to a Wagnerian opera; the robin is best in so called popular songs; while the wood thrush sings a song of four distinct voices."

"Like the human being, birds sing and are filled with vanity. In this capacity they use their plumage with great effect. In the Congo there is a male bird that struts before his mate and peers under his wing to see if she is looking at him."

The speaker concluded with the statement that birds sometimes copy from man and that man could learn a great deal by copying from the bird.

LIGHT BOOYS FOR THE CANAL.

Automatic In Operation, They Are Lighted When a Cloud Passes Over.

A contract for fifty-seven buoys to mark the channel of the Panama canal has been awarded by the canal commission to the American Gas Accumulator company of Philadelphia for about $148,000.

The light will be generated from powdered acetylene, and, it is said, the material in each buoy will not need to be replenished for a year.

An automatic "eye valve" will control the light. A strip of metal, designed to retain heat, is connected with the valve admitting gas to the burner. The adjustment on the strip of metal and the valve is so fine that the shadow from a passing cloud will cool the strip to such an extent that the valve is opened and the beacon lighted. The fast fog will cause the buoy to burn. When lighted the buoys can be seen eleven miles.

Aliens in Old London.

Here is a curious report of the aliens in London in the year 1307: "There being a great increase of foreigners in the city, her majesty ordered the lord mayor to take the name, quality and profession of all strangers residing within the city of London." The list was headed by the item, "Scots, 40." Other nations were represented by "French, 428; Spaniards and Portugals, 45; Ireland, 10; Dutch, 2,930; Burgundians, 4; Danes, 2; Liegeels, 1."

QUICKSILVER MINING.

An Occupation That Quickly Dooms the Workers.

The chief quicksilver mines in Europe are in the Spanish town of Almaden, which is an Arabic word, meaning "the mine of quicksilver." These mines were formerly worked by the Dorians and after them by the ancient Romans. Between 1645 and 1843 the Spanish government employed galley slaves in them, an occupation that ended in death. The fumes of the mercury produce constant salivation, and the system becomes permeated with the metal.

At first the victim is seized with tremblings, and then the teeth drop out; pains in the bones follow and then death. The annual yield of mercury is 1,500,000 pounds, to produce which 4,000 men are engaged in this unhealthy employment.

After Almaden so far as yield of quicksilver is concerned comes Idria, an Austrian town, twenty-eight miles from Triest. These mines also were once worked by criminals, who, owing to the terrible qualities of the mineral, expired after about two years service.

There are now nearly 500 miners engaged in the work at Idria. They are induced to enter the mines by high wages. A pension is allowed when they are disabled, and provision is made for their widows and children. Pearson's Weekly.

HER TWO QUESTIONS.

One Was Answered Before the Other After Marriage.

A silvery summer moon shone sweetly on the likewise silvery sands.

The summer sweethearts sat in silence. She was gazing up at the dim blue vault over them, where the little stars twinkled in a million tiny points of flame. He was gazing at her as if he'd like to eat her.

"Dorrie, what makes the stars shine so brightly tonight?" she gurgled.

"They are outshone by the glorious light of your eyes, my darling," he whispered foolishly, "and so pale in their splendor and—er—and—"

He didn't know how to go on, so he kissed her instead. And she was quite satisfied, perfectly content and glad.

And a solemn silence enwrapped the summer night.

Same moon, same sands, same people—only they are married now.

"I wonder how many telegraph poles," she murmured thoughtfully, "it would take to reach from here to the moon."

He looked at her as if he'd like to bite her.

"One, if it was long enough," he snapped. "Don't ask such silly questions!"

And a solemn silence enwrapped the summer night—London Answers.

DOGS OF ALASKA.

A Story That Illustrates Their Wonderful Intelligence.

Dogs on the trail often display intelligence that seems almost human. On one occasion I remember I was driving a team of dogs down the Yukon river and had one dog in the team called Tommy, who was a good dog in his way, but who showed a strong dislike to being harnessed—so such an extent that in the morning, when all the other dogs were hitched to the sled, Tommy would hide himself under a cabin or bury himself in the snow.

This continued for several mornings, and beating him seemed to have no effect.

One morning, however, the team had been standing in the cold waiting for Master Tommy. I finally discovered him hiding under the roots of a tree, and as soon as I came in sight, dragging the dog, the entire team, moved by a common impulse, bounded toward me and at once administered a terrible thrashing to Tommy.

I finally rescued him from his angry companions, and after that Tommy would always be the first to put his head in the collar in answer to my whistle.

The Ink Bag Squid.

When the squid is alarmed the ink bag that connects with the siphon opens its valve and a cloud of black fluid is ejected into the water, where it becomes quickly diffused, forming an effectual bar to pursue. The squids have a faculty of changing their color with great rapidity, and when laboring under great excitement waves of color seem to pass over them in quick succession. Their motions are extremely rapid, darting along with the velocity of light, now rushing into a school of small fry tall first, turning quickly to seize a victim and press it against the bladdered beak, where, by making triangular nips, the vertebral is generally instantly severed. It is interesting to note that the bite is always in the same place—the neck.—Charles

PROLOGUE.

An irate British lord and his beautiful but petulant lady; the Hon. Penelope Drake, youngest and most cherished sister of his lordship; Randolph Shaw, a handsome and athletic young American, and a French count are the leading characters in this amusing and highly entertaining romance by McCutcheon, the prince of American story tellers. It captures the interest from the very first paragraph, and there is not a dull line in it from start to finish.

CHAPTER I.

In Which a Young Man Trespasses.
It's just an infernal dude, your lordship, and I'll throw him in the river if he says a word

He has already said too much. Tompkins, confound him, don't you know?"

"Then I'll to throw him in whether he says anything or not, sir?"

"Have you seen him?"

"No, your lordship, but James says he wears a red coat and—"

"Never mind, Tompkins! He has no right to sit on this side of that log. The insufferable ass may own the land on the opposite side, but, confound him, I own it on this side."

This concluding assertion of the usually plied but now trite Lord Bazelhurst was not quite as unctuous as it sounded. As a matter of fact, the title to the land was vested entirely in his young American wife, his sole possession a cordial to depart, being a little more substantial but great deal more picturesque than the large, much handled piece of paper down in the safety deposit vault lying close and crumpled among a million gaudy, noisy little slips cut out on paper.

It requires no great stretch of imagination to understand that Lord Bazelhurst was not quite as unctuous as it sounded. As a matter of fact, the title to the land was vested entirely in his young American wife, his sole possession a cordial to depart, being a little more substantial but great deal more picturesque than the large, much handled piece of paper down in the safety deposit vault lying close and crumpled among a million gaudy, noisy little slips cut out on paper.

Lady Bazelhurst was the daughter of a New York millionaire. She was a most beautiful and arrogant. Nature gave her youth and beauty. Marriage gave her the remaining quality. Was she not Lady Bazelhurst? What odds if Lord Bazelhurst happened to be a middle aged, decrepit old? So much the better. Bazelhurst castle and the Bazelhurst estates thereby encumbered before her father came to the respite were among the oldest and most envied in the English market. Her mother noted, with anxious joy, that the present Lady Bazelhurst in body had extreme difficulty in master the eighth letter of the alphabet, certainly a most startling sign of mental superiority, notwithstanding the fact that her father was plain old John Banks (deceased), formerly of Jersey City, more lately of Wall street and St. Thomas'.

Bazelhurst was a great catch, but Banks was a good name to conjure with, so he capitulated with a willingness that savored somewhat of suspended animation, so fearless was he that he might do something to distract the dream before it came true. That was two years ago. With exquisite irony Lady Bazelhurst decided to have a country place in America. Her agents discovered a glorious section of woodland in the Adirondacks teeming with trout streams, game birds, unparalleled scenery. Her ladyship instructed them to buy without delay. It was just here that young Mr. Shaw came into prominence.

His grandfather had left him a fortune, and he was looking about for ways in which to spend a portion of it. College, travel and society having failed on him, he fled himself into the big hills west of Lake Champlain, searching for beauty, solitude and life as he imagined it should be lived. He found and bought 500 acres of the most beautiful bit of wilderness in the mountains.

The same streams coursed through his hills and dales that ran through those of Lady Bazelhurst, the only distinction being that his portion was the more desirable. When her ladyship's agents came hollering up to close their deal they discovered that Mr. Shaw had snatched up this elusive 500 acres of the original tract intended for their client. At least a thousand acres were left for the young lady, but she was petulant enough to covet all of it.

Overtures were made to Mr. Shaw, but he would not sell. He was preparing to erect a handsome country place, and he did not want to alter his plans. Courtingly at first, then somewhat scathingly, he declined to discuss the proposition with her agents. After two months of pressure of the most tiresome persistency he lost his temper and sent a message to his inquisitors that suddenly terminated all negotiations. Afterward when he learned that their client was they have no decent horses in this beastly country. They joggle the life out of one—but he was obliged to unbend himself perceptibly in order to keep pace with her as she hurried through the door.

The Hon. Penelope allowed her indolent gaze to follow them. A perplexed pucker finally developed on her fair brow and her thought was almost expressed aloud: "By Jove, I wonder if she really loves him," Penelope was very pretty and very bright. She was visiting America for the first time, and she was learning rapidly. "Cecil's a good sort, you know, even—but she was loyal enough to send her thoughts into other channels.

Nightfall brought half a dozen guests to Bazelhurst Villa. They were foolish to the point where even the chief characteristic, and they come only for bridge and sleep. There was a duke among them and also a French count, besides the bored New Yorkers; they waited brandy and soda as soon as they got into the house, and they went to bed early because it was so much easier to sleep lying down than sitting up.

All were up by noon the next day, more bored than ever, fondly praying that nothing might happen before bed time. The duke was making desultory love to Mrs. De Peyton and Mrs. De Peyton was leading him aimlessly toward the shudder and more gorged railment of nature. The brooks laugh with the glitter of trout, the trees chuckle with the flight of birds, the hillsides frolic in their abundance of game, but the acres are growing like dogs of war. "Love thy neighbor as thyself" is not printed on the boards that line the borders of the two estates. In bold black letters the signsboards innocently say: "No trespassing on these grounds. Keep off!"

"Yes, I fancy you'd better put him off the place if he comes down here again to fish," Tompkins said his lordship, in conclusion. Then he touched whip to his horse and bobbed off through the shady lane in most painfully upright fashion, his thin legs sticking straight out, his breath coming in agonized little jerks with each succeeding return of his person to the saddle.

"By Jove, Evelyn, it's most annoying about that confounded Shaw chap," he remarked to his wife as he mounted the broad steps leading to the gallery half an hour later, walking with the primness which suggests pain. Lady Bazelhurst looked up from her book, her fine aristocratic young face glowing with ready brilliancy.

"What has he done, Cecil dear?"

"Been fishing on our property again, that's all. Tompkins says he laughed at him when he told him to get off. I say, do you know, I think I'll have to adopt rough methods with that chap. He'll all right with his to catch our fish?"

"Oh, how I hate that man!" exclaimed her ladyship petulantly. "But I've given Thompson bail instructions."

"And what are they?"

"To throw him in the river next time."

"Oh, if he only could!" exasperatingly. "Could? My dear, Tompkins is an American. He can handle these things in their own way. At any rate, I told Tompkins if his nerve failed him at the last minute to come and notify me, I'll attend to this confounded pestiferous."

"Good for you, Cecil!" called out another young woman from the broad hammock in which she had been dawdling with half alert ears through the foregoing conversation. "Spoken like a true Briton. What is this poplar-like?"

"Hello, sister! Hang it all, what's he like? He's like an ass, that's all. I've never seen him, but if I ever called upon to—but you don't care to listen to details. You remember the big log that lay out in the river up at the bend? Well, it marks the property line. One half of its stumps belongs to the Shaw man, the other half to us—to us, Evelyn. We shan't get below that log, no, sir!" His lordship glared severely through his monocle in the direction of the faraway log, his watery blue eyes blinking as unceasingly as possible, his long, aristocratic nose wrinkling at his base in fine disdain. His five feet four of statue quivered with ill subdued emotion, but whether it was rage or the sudden recollection of the dog-trot through the woods it is beyond me to suggest.

"But suppose our fish venture into his waters, Cecil. What then? Isn't that trespass?" demanded the Hon. Penelope Drake, youngest and most cherished sister of his lordship.

"Now, don't be silly, Pen," cried her sister-in-law. "Of course we can't regulate the fish."

"But I dare say his fish will come below the log, so what's the odds?" said his lordship quickly. "A trout's a lawless brute at best."

"Is he big?" asked the Hon. Penelope laconically.

"They vary, my dear girl."

"I mean Mr. Shaw."

"Oh, I thought you meant the—but I don't know. What difference does that make? Big or little, he has to stay off my grounds." Was it a look of pride that his tall young wife bestowed upon him as he drew himself proudly erect, or was it akin to pity? At any rate, her gay young American head was inches above his own when she arose and suggested that they go inside and prepare for the housing of the guests who were to come over from the evening train.

"The drag has gone over to the station, Cecil, and it should be here by 10 o'clock."

"Confound his impudence, I'll show him," grumbled his lordship as he followed her, still legged, toward the door.

"What's up, Cecil, with your legs?" called his sister. "Are you getting old?" This suggestion always irritated him.

"Old? Silly question. You know how old I am. No; it's that beastly American horse. Evelyn, I told you

"it was this war, your jaysomp," put in James, the grocer. "Tompkins and me could see him from the point there, sir, a-fishin' below the log. So we says to each other 'Come on, and up we went to where he was a-fishin'. Tompkins, bein' the game warden, says to him, 'Hi, there!' He was plainly on our property, sir, a-fishin' from a boat for bass, sir. 'Hello, boy!' says he back to me. 'Get off our land,' says Tompkins. 'I am,' says he; 'it's water out here where I am.' Then—"

"You're wrong," broke in Tompkins. "He said 'It's wet out here where I am.'

"You're right. It was wet. Then Tompkins called him a vile name, your lordship—shall I repeat it, sir?"

"No, no!" cried four feminine voices. "Yes, do," muttered the dink.

"He didn't wait after that, sir. He rowed to shore in a flash and landed on our land. 'What do you mean by that?' he said, mudlike. 'My orders is to put you off this property,' says Tompkins, or to throw you in the river?" "Who gave these orders?" asked Tompkins.

"'I am,' says he; 'it's water out here where I am.' Then—"

National Palace of Haiti, in Which President Leconte Lost His Life in Fire Which Followed Explosion

HAITIAN PALACE DESTROYED BY EXPLOSION

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti, Aug. 10.—At a joint meeting of the chamber and senate General Laverne Auguste senator and ex-minister of public works was named as president to succeed General Cincinnati Leconte, who lost his life when the national palace of Haiti was blown up by a power explosion and burned. The members of President Leconte's family, who were awoken in the terrible shock, found themselves almost surrounded by flames but managed to make their way to safety. The first explosion was followed by others when the fire reached the cellar of the palace, where a great quantity of ammunition had been stored. So great was the force of the explosions that a number of small cannon, fragments of iron and shells were thrown for great distances in all directions. The palace was located in the Champ de Mars, a great, barren field about one-half mile square, situated midway between the business and residence sections. Constructed of wood, with a corrugated tin roof it was anything but a handsome or fireproof building and its vulnerability was so well recognized by preceding administrations that extra precautions had for years been taken to prevent the possibility of revolutionaries approaching so close that bombs could be thrown into the court yard.

JOHNSON SEEKS LANGFORD

Black Champ Willing to Fight Again for Only $15,000.

United Press, U. S. A.
NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—Having been record champion for nearly two weeks, Jack Johnson today began looking for a good excuse to "come down." He finally decided that if some promoter will make the ante large enough he will fight Sam Langford. Jack is made up to his demands. He wants $10,000 for his end and $5,000 carrying expenses in addition.

Not a Serious Matter.
Point is you can't tell if you may get into the heat of any kind of ball game if you are not in shape. That is what the Fairmont O. & P. team did to the Wheeling team in a 17 inning game. Richards, ex-College grad, won and had two hits for the Fairmont team.

BAN JOHNSON NOT OPPOSED TO UNION AMONG THE PLAYERS

Baseball Chief Against Organization Similar to that of Labor.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 10.—Ban Johnson is here on business. It is of pertaining to the new protective coalition formed by the baseball players of the major leagues. John declared he is not opposed to the new coalition which will stand for the purpose of upholding the rights of all players. He saw no reason why the players could not have an organization which could represent them but gave his opinion that union should be on the lines of the Labor Union would not be of much use. Nor would he state whether the proposed organization would be admitted to the formal council.

According to the players who admit they are identified with the proposed organization, founded by Dave Pultz, it is being formed for the sole purpose of giving the players representation before the club owners and legitimate others not to utilize salaries to anything of that sort.

The first of the organization will be to ask the National Commissions to amend the law which permits players to be banned. It is mentioned that so long as a player is owned by a minor league club he should receive the major league salary and it is expected that is not the case but he should be treated outright. This would put an end to farming players.

Richards Wants Back Salary.

Tack Richards, ex-Coker, playing with Diamond, writes Tom Hendon to say he received a check from Secretary Grotz of the National Commission for his back salary. He says he noted Grotz had received a check for $2,000 and expressed his intention of communicating with Hendon to square his account.

Bridgeport Weakest, Financially.

The Bridgeport team of the O. & P. club is having tough sledding. Player's salaries must be met at once. It is $16 or the team will fold. Financially, it is the weakest of the four teams remaining in the league, and it is said is not receiving support.

New Berths for Falmentors.

Pitcher Patterson, released by the Fairmont O. & P. club, has been signed by the Kalamazoo team of the South Michigan League. Second Baseman Wright, who was also released by the Pirates a few days ago, will go to the Birmingham, Ont., club of the Canadian League.

Salmon Leaf.

For a delicious salmon loaf use two cans of salmon and a loaf of white bread. Remove the crusts of the bread and remove the bones from the salmon. Break the bread into crumbs and the salmon into flakes and mix them together. Moisten with two beaten eggs, two tablespoonsfuls of melted butter and one or two teaspoonsfuls of lemon juice. Add with salt and pepper to taste. Add a third tablespoonful of cream if not moist enough. Butter a bread pan and put the mixture into it. Bake the loaf for an hour or until thoroughly done. Serve with cream sauce or a white sauce sprinkled with minced parsley.

IMPROVEMENT SAID TO BE CAUSE

Forward Trend of Lines Not Accompanied by Increase in Capitalization as Heretofore, but Will Place System in Better Light

It has lately become not improbable that eventually the railroads will be allowed to make some important advances through which until quite recently would have been regarded as the most unlikely influence a physical evolution of the iron trade review. Enough has been done by way of valuation to suggest that a complete straightening would be much more favorable to the railroads than has hitherto been assumed. In several States mutual valuations have been made, in a spirit which can be regarded as the whole and most favorable to the railroads and these valuations have in nearly every instance proved high compared with the expectations.

Consequently the railroads have been expecting that eventually they would be allowed to raise rates their feeling being that there was an era of reductions which finally would yield to the nice titles of the rise but month after month the record is that of every 100 rate changes passing through the comittee for only one item is in advance. Perhaps this will ultimately be found that a physical valuation will be the means of bringing about rate advances.

Whatever the situation 10 years ago or at present, between actual value of the railroads and the securities issued against the properties, there can hardly be any question that the improvements of the last decade have tended to improve that relation. There has been much improvement in properties which has not been attended by a corresponding increase in capitalization. In the substitution of heavy for light steel rails in the steady upbuilding of wooden by steel rails and in many other respects the railroad properties have been improved, year by year, beyond the increases in capitalization standing alone.

In the older days, of course, it was different. When a road got into financial difficulties it made security instead of improvements, but in recent years the trend has been to widen the position in which a physical evolution would place the railroads in a better light.
